I just finished "Restless Waters" by Jessica Park and the only thing I can do now is bow to Park in awe, respect and gratitude for sharing this beautiful(ly) heart-wrenching story with us. A story that moved me to the core. A story full of bravery, resilience and love. I was worried about this book, because I loved "Left Drowning" so ferociously hard and Sabin owned my heart. I was scared that "Restless Waters" wouldn't do the characters justice. Boy, was I wrong. As Blythe's, Chris' and Sabin's story continues, it's not all sunshine and flowers. Instead, Jessica Park does what so few authors manage to do. She gives a brutal, unyielding glance at the destruction, the pain and the heart-break caused by abuse and the resulting trauma. She doesn't relent, doesn't let the reader come up for air and through that we get to experience a minuscule fraction of what it feels like to be left drowning. She opens our eyes to the horrible realities some have to go through. She doesn't treat it lightly, doesn't romanticize it or use it for shock value. Instead, she gives a voice to the ones that go unheard. The intensity, the pain that the characters, but especially Sabin, are still suffering from isn't easy to digest. It tore me apart, had me in a constant state of fear, pain and heart-break. But then moments of peace and serenity that Blythe, Chris and Sabin experience feel more rewarding, more meaningful. I love how Jessica Park wasn't afraid to delve into the darkness of the Shepherd siblings' lives. How she had the courage to let us witness them falling apart. And how she refrained from lessening the meaning by resorting to clichés. Love might be a factor that assists in healing. But just because Chris and Blythe fall in love, it doesn't mean the past becomes insignificant. The love and stability between them and their respective siblings is not an automatic "you're free of trauma" card. Sometimes, the pain is so strong that even the biggest love struggles to break through the darkness. I'm happy she didn't diminish the message by turning it into a gooey fairy-tale. I also loved that the definitions of friendship, relationship and boundaries were unique, showing that what Chris and Blythe have or the friendship between Blythe and Sabin are complex. What they share can't be labeled or fit into a mold. It's different, it's intense, it's them. It's so freakin' beautiful it made me weep - happy, that no matter what, they have this profound bond. A bond that might stretch, might fray, but never tears. I have so much love for the characters - ever single one of them. Before "Restless Waters" I still had a bit of a hard time to connect with Chris, but his love, his acceptance and his selflessness made my appreciation for him soar. He's an amazing boyfriend, brother, friend and person. Blythe is lucky to have him. But that also same goes for the other way because she has the most beautiful soul. She's a good person through and through, with a heart of gold, an unparalleled loyalty, strength and understanding - despite her own traumatic past. And Sabin - my beautiful, broken Sabin. He's struggling, consumed by guilt and pain. He's failing at times, falling, but he has Blythe and Chris to pick him up, even if they can't break the fall. His struggle isn't just internal, but hows on the outside - a brave and beautiful choice by Jessica Park in a ripped, muscly, alpha-male dominated book world. I love the dynamics. I love the ups and downs. I love the story-telling and the characters. I love the twists and surprises. And I love the incredible authenticity. In short, I love everything about this book. Even that it made me late for work, that I looked like a sobbing, blubbering panda and that it stole a piece of my heart that it'll hold forever. Just like "Left Drowning". 6 this-rating-doesn't-do-it-justice stars. 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. Loved it Von Emmi RTHIS book - for me it was the p e r f e c t conclusion to Left drowning. I bought Restless waters on release day but was a little anxious to read it because I love Left drowning so much. So I waited and finally I was in the right mood Jessica Park made my heart hurt again for these broken characters but I loved it and I'm so very happy for Sabin, Blythe and Chris and the whole gang So, together, we run through the pain, as we have before and as we might need to do again and again.
