Kurzbeschreibung Why is it that we wait until our wedding day to wear the dress of our dreams? Right now, Izzy Stanton is asking herself that exact question. Because she has just bought herself a wedding dress only she doesn't exactly have the fiancé that usually goes with it. In fact, the way things are going, she may not even have a boyfriend for much longer. After the way he has been treating her lately, she is doubtful the relationship will make it till the end of tonight. She is sick of his constant patronizing behavior it's all about his job, his demands. He always has to come first, and she is just the accessory to dangle on his arm during his horrid company dinners. Whenever Izzy needs him, he cannot be bothered. In fact he won't even listen. Not somebody you want to be stuck with till death do us part. However the dress is there now she has bought it. It's too late to change her mind. She doesn't want to either she has never felt better about buying anything in her life ... even if it's ridiculously expensive and utterly impractical. So what is she going to do? Should she cut her losses and get back on the dating scene, trying to bag herself a potential groom, and go through all the horrid motions that come with finding the perfect guy? It seems like an awful lot of trouble just to wear a dress. Even if it's fabulous and makes her feel more special than anything she has ever felt before. Wearing a wedding dress without a wedding seems like madness though. Or maybe ... maybe the solution comes from where she least expects it, and she should just go for it.
